

"I'm trying to invent some new laws. All the old ones disagree with evolutionary theory."

"How could the Second Law apply to everything, as Kelvin and Einstein said,—when we evolutionists have decided that everything in our world is an 'open system' and not subject to the Second Law at all?"

"Let's get rid of the Second Law—and all the other laws. Or pretty soon we'll have to begin keeping the moral law: the ten commandments!"

"Tell the publishers to stop mentioning the Second Law in the textbooks they publish for the schools. It keeps embarrassing us."

"I'm trying to find something that doesn't corrode, break down, rot, or fall to pieces. Then I can say the Second Law has been disproved."

"It's just a meeting of evolutionists."
